

Google Maps: Smart Trip Builder

Personalized AI-powered itineraries that understand your preferences, adapt to your time constraints, and leverage real-world data to create seamless travel experiences.

The Problem: Trip Planning is Broken

Planning even a simple day trip feels overwhelming. Users bounce between apps, blogs, and review sites trying to piece together a coherent plan.

Where should I go?

Too many options, no clear starting point

What fits my schedule?

Manually calculating drive times and visit durations

Where should I eat?

Endless scrolling through restaurant reviews

Is it worth visiting?

Uncertainty about quality and crowds

Even with Google Maps open, users still lack the clarity and confidence to make quick decisions.

Real Users Say Planning a Trip is Stressful

"Weekend travel planning ... chaotic ... low-quality info online." — r/SoloTravel_India

"Trying to figure out how much you can realistically fit into your trip." — r/solotravel

"The most frustrating part of planning a trip" — r/TravelHacks

"The worst part is making decisions about what to cut from the itinerary." — r/solotravel

"I've done the grind ... and got home exhausted." — r/TravelHacks

Result: Decision fatigue, uncertainty, over-planning or under-planning, and wasted time.

Critical User Pain Points

Decision Fatigue

Endless options without personalized filtering create analysis paralysis

Zero Personalization

Generic suggestions that don't account for individual preferences or travel style

Static Plans

Itineraries can't adapt when traffic hits or restaurants close unexpectedly

Fragmented Experience

Jumping between Maps, travel blogs, Instagram reels, and review sites

Constant Uncertainty

Nagging doubt: "Am I missing something better? Is this really worth my time?"
